MANAGEMENT POLICY

Equity markets outside the United States were up in December, ending 2025 as a strong year across all financial markets. The Fed continued to adjust its monetary policy by cutting its key interest rates by 25 points for the third time this year, while the ECB kept its key interest rates unchanged from the third quarter.

The CAC 40 closed the good year among the main European equity indices in 2025, marked by the persistence of French political uncertainty. European markets were boosted by Germany's major plans (financing of a defence and infrastructure effort). US markets were hit by AI related concerns despite the surprise third quarter US GDP report that beat expectations.

In Asia, China, faced with mixed economic indicators, announced an ambitious economic stimulus for 2026. And as expected, the central bank of Japan raised rates with a view to monetary normalisation, a sign of its confidence in Japan's progress towards a sustainable inflation target of 2%. Gold and precious metals continued to rally over the month, and oil prices finished around $60.

The strategy had a negative performance this month, mainly due to the continued strong sector rotation towards defensive sectors at the expense of growth sectors that started in November. This reflected heightened risk aversion in markets due to uncertainty surrounding the Fed's monetary policy. At the sector level, the technology and industrial sectors were the main negative contributors. In contrast, financials and energy posted positive returns.
