MANAGEMENT POLICY

Financial markets were supported in August by trade agreements between the US, European Union and Japan, an extension of the trade truce with China and hopes that the Federal Reserve may cut interest rates. Indeed, expectations for US monetary policy point to a possible rate cut in September, followed by further cuts by the end of the year. At the same time, the European Central Bank is maintaining an accommodating monetary policy, with a further rate cut expected by the end of the year. In addition, good company results also contributed to market momentum, although the month ended on a rather negative note.

US indices have caught up with European indices in dollar terms over the summer. Nevertheless, the S & P 500 and the Nasdaq posted respective drops of 0.5% and 1.5% in euros during August 2025. It should be noted that these indices are down 2.9% and 1.5% year to date (YTD) in euro terms as the continued weakness of the US dollar continues to affect the performance of US assets when expressed in euro. Conversely, the Eurostoxx 50 rose 0.6% in August, allowing it to post a strong performance of 8.5% since the beginning of the year. The MSCI China, expressed in euros, also rose 2.4% over the month, reaching a rise of 12% YTD. Despite trade tensions, China has maintained some economic stability, supported by government measures promoting growth.

On the global macroeconomic front, stability remains, with sustained growth and inflation seemingly under control in major economic areas. However, geopolitical tensions persist, particularly in Ukraine and the Middle East, as well as in France, where a government crisis is underway. The strategy posted a slightly negative return this month but has remained ahead of its benchmark year to date. At the sector level, the financials, consumer discretionary, communications services and real estate sectors were the main positive contributors. Conversely, the technology, healthcare, energy and materials sectors suffered declines, mainly due to a change in market regime and a rotation towards more defensive sectors. This trend was exacerbated by a slowdown in major technology companies, notably Microsoft and Nvidia.
