MANAGEMENT POLICY

Financial markets were cautious in August, torn between geopolitical tensions in the Middle East, the path of inflation and uncertainty surrounding the US Federal Reserve's policy. In the United States, the strength of economic activity and the labor market, combined with the persistence of high core inflation, forced investors to postpone their hopes of imminent rate cuts. At the Jackson Hole symposium, Fed chairman Kevin Warsh accentuated this uncertainty by officially abandoning any forward guidance, now favouring a "meeting by meeting" decision making approach.

This lack of monetary visibility in the United States fuelled global bond volatility. In Europe, this volatility was amplified by the direct competition between public and private debt on the issuance market. The case of France particularly illustrated these tensions: faced with budgetary uncertainty and an abundance of French sovereign paper, investors demanded higher risk premiums.

On the equity markets, the polarisation of performances has increased. In the US, the technology sector maintained its leadership, allowing the S&P 500 to gain 2.6% and the Nasdaq to rise 4.2%. In Europe, the trend was much more subdued (+0.5%), masking a wide dispersion between issuers able to defend their margins in a mixed economic environment and those experiencing a slowdown in their earnings momentum. Finally, Asia remained dependent on regional dynamics: on the one hand, investors are waiting for Chinese stimulus measures that are still struggling to convince, and on the other, fluctuations in the yen continue to dictate the trend in Tokyo.

Over the month, Palatine Planète outperformed its benchmark index. Among the main positive contributors were company publications that were better than expected in various sectors. This was the case for Kingspan, which reported strong results driven by the rapid acceleration of its data center infrastructure exposure. Novonesis, a leader in biosolutions, also stood out after raising its guidance and announcing a share buyback programme. Swedish heat pump manufacturer Nibe confirmed the recovery of its underlying market. Finally, wind turbine manufacturer Vestas benefited from a positive surprise on its profitability and solid prospects, supported by a record order book. Conversely, the fund suffered from the continued correction in the semiconductor sector, which was hit by the rise in interest rates that weighs on growth stocks. Power grid operators such as E.ON and Elia also suffered after the publication of the German draft regulation on the determination of returns, despite their negligible exposure to gas.
