MANAGEMENT POLICY

Several market events in July included customs deals with the US, particularly the European Union, stimulus measures in China and a difficult results season for some European companies. The European markets continued to underperform the US markets. European markets continued to underperform US markets.

While the EuroStoxx 50 rose only 0.3%, the S & P 500 rose 2.2% and the Nasdaq 2.4%. It should also be noted that the CAC 40 has increased by 1.4% during this period. In Asia, markets were positive, with China responding positively to further stimulus. On a sector basis in Europe, cyclical stocks led gains, while media and property lagged.

In Europe, the value style continued to significantly outperform the growth/quality style. Yields on US sovereign bonds rose slightly as well as in Europe due to expectations of massive debt issues. European credit spreads tightened showing increased risk appetite on the credit market. On the commodity front, the oil price rose on Trump threats of further sanctions against Russia. Gold remained stable after a sharp rise at the beginning of the year.

Among the positive contributors, industrial stocks significantly outperformed, especially those connected to electrification, with companies such as Nexans, Prysmian, Spie and Legrand, which published better than expected results. During the month, we also observed a rebound of exclusively renewable stocks, such as EDPR and Nordex thanks to a more favourable environment. Conversely, the technology sector disappointed and weighed on the fund's performance, with players such as ASML, ASM International and Soitec, who are facing uncertainties about the investment plans of certain foundry, as well as concerns related to the macroeconomic environment and the possible impact of customs duties.
